Writer's Block is a quarterly web magazine that publishes insightful and entertaining articles for and about "Canadians in the writing trade" The index is fully hypertext-linked. Because the magazine is updated quarterly, the index is a living document.

This is an excellent index, well laid out, contained on a single page, and conspicuously free from gadgets and gimmicks. Upper-case is used for proper nouns only, and as far as I could tell all the links were working. We have no hesitation in giving the award to this site, but there are a few things we would like to suggest to the indexer which might improve it still further:

- More spacing between lines in the index and perhaps a larger font
- Perhaps some typographical indication of which links go to the top of a page and which ones are linked to sections within a page.
- We also have a small reservation about using the entry itself as a hyperlink: what happens when the site expands and there is more than one page about the same topic?

But these are all minor quibbles. We like it very much overall.
